

8. David Arday's Humorous Signs

I have several humorous details on my 2'x4' HO module, but I only have decent photos of two of them, as the others are very small and both hard to see and hard to photograph.

The first photo (left) is of a billboard message that sits atop a hill on one side of the module. This is the largest detail and probably the one that most often catches the eye of visitors at train shows.

The second photo (right) shows the identifying name sign on the industrial building located on the module. The name is a takeoff on that of a longstanding northern Virginia plumbing company, John C. Flood. I figured any plumber named Flood was good for a laugh.
